

Nursing Course, School of Medicine

Job Opportunities Faculty Member

As the only public institution of higher education in nursing in Yokohama, Yokohama City University School of Nursing aims to contribute to society through the pursuit of advanced expertise in nursing, based on a broad perspective that takes into account the needs and trends of the community and society. In education, the program aims to cultivate research skills that contribute to the practice and study of nursing, and to develop human resources who will be leaders in improving and reforming the quality of nursing in health and welfare, as well as in contributing to a diverse society.

Based on the perspective of the mid-term plan, this call for applications is open to a wide range of educators and researchers who are enthusiastic about pursuing nursing that contributes to the best interests of children and fosters human resources who can play an active role in society, with a focus on issues and needs related to children's healthy development and health. We are also seeking individuals who are willing and able to actively engage in the career development of nursing students and the education of advanced practice nursing (professional nurses) in collaboration with the University of Hawaii, as well as those who are willing and able to proceed based on obtaining external funds such as scientific research grants. We are seeking applicants who will be in charge of the following research fields and subjects, build good relationships with Yokohama Children's Hospice, health and welfare institutions, educational institutions, and related professions within the university and its two affiliated hospitals, and actively engage in education, research, and community service.
